GALLIC COCK DEFIES FOE

Tilloloy's Two-Century-Old Rooster Dethroned by Shell-To Be Reset by D. A. R.

PARIS, April 1.-Every one has hea of the Gallic cock; poets and historians yet heard of a rooster who went to war, defying the enemy from the parapet of trenches, and the story would perhaps never have been written had not the Daughters of the American Revolution recently decided that the small town of Tilloloy, in the Somme district, should be rebuilt at their expense.

At the very top of the church at Tilloloy sat a rooster. He had been there for close on two centuries, had seen Louis XIV enter the church to pray and had overlooked -the surrounding countryside James Bernard Leonard, 1260 Raum until 1915. He saw the Germans advance, but stuck to his post and defied them. On June 1, 1915, the battle raged around Tilloloy. Shells shricked through the air, and still the rooster held out, but finally the Germans got the range of the church and sent the rooster tumbling to earth. He dropped at the feet of a poilu, a volunteer in the Foreign Legion, which had ncluded in it many brave American boys "They've knocked you down," said the ilu. "You're hurt, but never mind. I soldier picked him up and put him away in his knapsack.

From then on the rooster knew all the excitement of trench warfare. He hailed success and reverse with equal. presence of mind. Instead of a church teeple the rooster found a place on steeple the rooster found a place on a trench parapet and it was there he defied the Germans more than he did on top of the church at Tilloloy.

At last, however, he was hit by shell splinters. His head was cut off and his body was covered with wounds. But his spirit was not broken. At every important battle—Verdun, the Yser, Champarne—he was to be seen headless.

pagne—he was to be seen, headless facing the foe. His master took him everywhere he ent, whether in billets or at home.

went, whether in billets or at home. Finally the master's knapsack grew too heavy, and, passing near a brook, the soldier committed the rooster's body to the waters. His master trudged wearily on to meet his foe.

The poor rooster would no doubt have remained in his watery grave had not the Daughters of the American Revolution come forward. When the soldier heard of their intention he wrote to heard of their intention he wrote to nform them of where the cock might be found.

He will be given a new head and when a new church is built at Tilloloy he will again be perched up on the steeple, ready when the day comes to crow over the steeple.
